ABOUT WOOLGOOLGA

The area, originally inhabited by the Gumbaynggirr Aboriginal people, was named to describe the area "Wiilgulga" and the Black Apple trees that grew here. Permanent European settlement occurred in the 1870s and soon supplied thriving timber getting and sawmilling industries. The Sikh community blossomed prior to the 1901 White Australia Policy and then grew again during World War 2 due to labour shortages in the productive banana-growing area, and at the time was the largest regional Sikh/Punjabi population in Australia.

Today, Woolgoolga, as it was officially named in 1966, is one of the largest blueberry growing regions in the country, taking over from the banana industry. Home to the beautiful beaches, stunning headlands and a thriving food hub, Woolgoolga has become a favourite with Australian and international visitors.

We welcome you, as we serve traditional Punjabi North Indian food.
